Hans Egede : Journals in Greenland: 1770-1778 (Adventures in New Lands) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Journals in Greenland: 1770-1778 (Adventures in New Lands):

Hans Egedes remarkable 1770-1778 journals were first published in 1818 when the British launched their great nineteenth-century Arctic explorations and such information was in enormous demand. The coast of eastern Greenland had been virtually inaccessible to Europeans for four centuries. Egedes fascinating writings relate his determined quest for remnants of old settlements, keen observations of the Greenlandic Inuit on subjects as varied as polygamy, witchcraft, health, education, how the Inuits contact with outsiders affected this indigenous people, and previously little-known information about the geography of the islands eastern territories. After years of being out-of-print, Egedes colorful accounts are once again made available to English-speaking readers in this wonderful and timely new series, launched just as the eyes of the world are, not a moment too soon, drawn northward.

About the Author HANS EGEDE was the grandson of the Norwegian Lutheran missionary Hans Poulsen Egede (1686-1758), the apostle of Greenland.
