4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Good recounting of personal hiking and mountaineering adventuresBy R. ColeIf you enjoy non-fiction stories about hiking and mountains, this book is an excellent collection of first hand experiences.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Appalachia on SteroidsBy Outdoor ProfessionalDesperate Steps: Life, Death, and Choices Made in the Mountains of the NortheastAppalachia Journal editor Chris Woodside has assembled a cache of fascinating tales and accounts,using her wisdom as both an experienced outdoors woman, professional editor, and author in her own right.A must read for anyone headed for the big peaks as well as for those who can't. A fine and important additionto outdoor and travel narrative literature.

The explorers chronicled in this collection push the limitsof endurance, weather, altitude, or personal achievement. Some make history, such as the first American climber to ascend Kilimanjaro in 1932; others, such as the leader of an 1896 team attempting a first ascent of Canada's Mount Lefroy, never return. Each essay has been chosen from the archives of America's oldest mountaineering and conservation journal, Appalachia, to guide you forward from the age of first ascents until the present day. Freak accidents, legendary perseverance, and singularly colorful personalities as well as climbing luminaries such as Bradford Washburn, Elizabeth Knowlton, and Fritz Wiessner all figure into this fascinating, illustrated collection.
